- At the opening of the American session, the Mexican peso lost ground and was positioned in 2nd place among the currencies of emerging countries that presented the greatest losses against the dollar. Today, the exchange rate presents a slight bearish bias as it trades within a sideways trend, due to the low volume due to the US holiday. At the local level, consumer confidence fell to 45.4 during June, from the previous figure of 46.5, considering greater pessimism in the outlook and the current economic conditions of the country.
- The dollar, measured through the DXY index, trades in negative territory within a narrow range, considering the low volume of operations due to the US holiday for Independence Day. After the approval of the fiscal package yesterday in Congress, the attention of operators falls on Donald Trump's signature to make his project official; the event is expected to take place around 3:00 p.m. (Mexico City time). Additionally, the U.S. president mentioned that today he will be reporting the magnitude of the tariffs that some nations will be complying with to trade with the U.S., pending the details of the few negotiations that have been reached in recent weeks.
- In the basket of currencies of developed economies there are mixed movements, where the Swedish krona and the Japanese yen lead the gains of the session, while the Australian and Canadian dollars are at the head of the most losing currencies of the session. Meanwhile, the pound retreated as fiscal concerns increase in the United Kingdom.
